

Internet Wiretapping is not only an invasion of privacy, but it will be a waste of taxpayer's money. Internet wiretapping is akin to following US citizens around all day watching where they go, as well as opening all letters going to or from their houses. This invasion of privacy is not tolerated for citizens not under surveillance for a crime in the physical world, and this right should extend to the virtual world. Even if Internet Wiretapping were made to become a lawful act, it would easily be circumvented by encryption of e-mail. Thus, it would only amount to a waste of taxpayer money.